

Thomas Storck
Wednesday, March 26, 2008
7:00 PM

Community and Dwelling Space:
Some Reflections from Catholic Doctrine and Tradition

What does Catholic tradition, both the formal teaching of the Church, and tradition in the wider sense, have to say about the kinds of physical or social arrangements we make for how we live? Do Catholic concepts of community have implications for the design of cities and communities, and for the formal and informal institutions we establish for our social life?