

Jack Wilbern
Wednesday, March 12, 2008
7:00 PM

Design Issues in Cohousing: What promotes community most?

A short summary of the main design elements that are found to be key to promoting ongoing social interactions, a strong sense of place, a sense of safety, community ownership and the growth of social capital between the residents in cohousing communities. To be followed by a question / answer period to answer specific questions from this session.